Gary,

I wonder what the hurry is. David is probably correct, but unless the landowner is requesting this action my thought is that they should be left in place just in case. At the very least I think from a PR perspective it would look good to keep that as a tool in the arsenal. Also, other interested parties (i.e. Harris County, Univ of Houston, etc..) may want to independently take samples down the road to be sure that there has not been a change in status. I know the PRPs don't like this idea which is probably the best argument for keeping them in place.

Stephen

Stephen,

See any issues with this? I am considering concurring with this, but wanted to get your thoughts first.

Gary – At this time, we feel that the groundwater monitoring wells that were installed as part of investigations on the areas south of I-10 have met their objectives, and there is not a need for further data collection from those wells. With your concurrence, we would like to start planning for abandoning and plugging those wells as required by Texas regulations.

Please let me know if you have any concerns with us moving forward with planning for the abandonment of those wells.
